CW's argument on Walls — ~~last, as a~~ ~~argument on~~ ~~Walls~~ — is the first time in the case we appear to be using special pleading, or to be inconsistent or insincere (in our distinction from Goldstein).

This would be all right if judge had accepted pros. argument for dismissing Goldstein for cause. But he hasn't.

~~Walls should be~~

We should discuss beforehand proposed arguments for challenges for cause, start with an eye to consistency, and to avoiding certain arguments, including unjustified inferences (CW on "Arroyo's husband's precarious economic position"), or Walls' opinion on work

[Why even these ^(arguments for) challenges for cause not discussed earlier?] (Must too casual attitude on these arguments)

[There is an issue of risk here on which defendants should have a ^(major) say — I would rather risk running out of peremptory challenges than start the trial with a ^{partisan} impression of casual concern for principle]

Practically speaking, the predictable effect of allowing in unconvincing arguments, and frivolous challenges ("all 10 who had had clearances") I was to ~~be~~ allow Judge to ignore our potentially strong challenges to Araya, Berkeley, & ~~Thurmond~~ ^{Conrad & predict will be denied}, and to settle for his previous-decided trade of Goldstein for Hietala.

on their, or spouse's
current clearances.
(Well-stated by LS on Greenwald).

Leonard's eloquent and powerful (and understated) argument on Goldstein was strongly undercut.

Of course, main problem was lack of time to coordinate — but why did this occur?

Also, But is there, possibly, an insufficient concern for avoiding the impression I'm afraid we gave today, & for the first time?
